Disney orders 7th ship

DISNEY Cruise Line has ordered another ship, to be delivered in 2022, between its next two ships ordered last year for debut in 2021 and 2023.

The vessel will be Disney Cruise Line's seventh ship and be built at the same shipyard as the other newbuilds, the Meyer Werft facility in Germany.

"We decided two ships wouldn't be enough to hold all of the exciting new experiences we have been dreaming up to take family cruise vacations to a whole new level with immersive Disney storytelling, world-class family entertainment, and imaginative innovations that are fantastically fun and uniquely Disney," Bob Chapek, chairman of Walt Disney Parks and Resorts said.

"By the time all three new ships are sailing, we'll have nearly doubled the size of our existing fleet," he explained.

All three 1,250-stateroom ships are promised to "have their own unique experiences" and ship names, design plans & itineraries are still in development.

They will be powered by clean-burning liquefied natural gas and be the same size – approximately 135,000 gross tonnes.

Disney has promised the new ships will "usher in the next generation of innovative cruise experiences designed especially for families that will transform the art-of-cruising and take guests on adventures in a way never dreamed of before".

The Sea Cloud catalogue details the latest on board offerings from food to activities to keep guests entertained at sea.

Virgo's Golden route

WBT shore power a no go

THE NSW Govt has ruled out providing shore-to-ship power at Sydney's White Bay Cruise Terminal as a means to mitigate air emissions from cruise ships.

The decision follows a study led by the Port Authority of NSW into the feasibility, cost and emissions associated with shore power which found installation would cost $36m and emissions benefits would be minimal.

Currently only 25% of all ships calling into the terminal are shore power capable and it would cost an additional $27m to retrofit the vessels for the technology.

NSW Maritime Minister Melinda Pavey noted since the introduction of low sulphur requirements in Oct 2015 at WBT, emissions of sulfur oxides had reduced by 87%, and particulate matter had reduced 69%.

The Port Authority of NSW said it supported the government's decision, noting it would continue to work with stakeholders to address community concerns regarding cruise ship emissions.

Carnival Australia told CW the report's recommendation "was sensible because it balanced the high cost of shore power with the likely negligible benefits of such a move".

Between Sep 2015-Apr 2017, emission levels had been exceeded only on two occasions, both days when no cruise ship was berthed at the White Bay Cruise Terminal.

One of the days was due to significant bushfire hazard reduction burning near Sydney and the second day was due to a local source of unknown origin.

"The fact that levels were exceeded on days when ships were not berthed at White Bay helps put the study's recommendation in perspective in terms of the relative benefits of such a high cost investment," Carnival said.

Coral's new itinerary

FANS of the Sydney to Hobart Yacht Race can follow the festivities aboard Coral Expeditions' new Sydney to Hobart maritime-themed cruise.

A GROUP of 1,500 passengers on an around the world cruise from Sydney created a lot of noise in Cobh, Ireland, after their impromptu "Aussie, Aussie Aussie, Oi, Oi, Oi" chant on board Sea Princess, while it was in port on 07 Jul.

The ship was docked in town to mark the town's annual 'Australia Day' event that celebrates the thousands of emigrants that left from Cobh.

A local Cobh native started the chant from the dock, to which the masses on board the ship responded enthusiastically.

While in town the passengers attended many Australian and Irish themed events.

The Australia Day event has been held annually every year in Cobh since 2009.
